Highlights of January

January is usually quite calm on the faculty, so we have taken the opportunity to improve on our internal structures and operations. A lot of talk about Covid-19 and restrictions, as usual...The government leaves a lot up to interpretation which makes new restrictions a hassle and most of the meetings with the school have revolved around this.

1. Exams

Did you write any end-of-term exams? The government decided to keep all exams physical and LUSEM followed these restrictions. A lot of students were scared of either catching covid, or missing their exams due to quarantine. We don't like our members missing exams due to sickness or feeling unsafe participating in their education. We sadly couldn't change the school's mind on the subject, so reverted to plan B: To make the exams as safe as possible we pushed for exams to be given on several dates, so you don't have to wait for the retake in case you were ill during the first exam. Constructive dialogue with LUSEM led to extra exams on several courses, as well as safety measures such as face masks and extra classrooms for more space.

2. Communication plan

We need you to know what we are up to! As much as we care about gathering your opinions and representing you towards LUSEM, it's really important for us to reach out to you. We need you to know what we are up to! We sat down and made a communication plan - our attempt to create more transparency and more understanding of what educational surveillance is all about. We plan to send out monthly updates and at the end of every semester publish our greatest achievements this semester. We need you to know what we can do for you and your education!

3. Evaluation of the educational surveillance

We are great at what we do but feel that we could get even better. In an epic effort, Samuel led arb. education revision, through the task of evaluating and improving our work to improve your education. The revision resulted in a row of improvements and suggestions. Something like this had not been done for several years - it's safe to say that it was badly needed!

Now we turn to implement all the improvements, hoping to represent you and your opinions even better in the future.
